Tidbits from the Women of Empire State: New York

Elizabeth Blackwell's

parents were abolitionists in England and the United States. It is thought that her family hid runaway slaves.

In Washington, Belva Ann Lockwood worked hard for a bill that would give women the same pay as men.

Louise Bethune supported the Architects' Licensing Bill in New York. The bill enforced tests for architects to be licensed. It took 25 years for the bill to pass.

Nellie Bly was one of the first reporters to go "behind the scenes." It was called Stunt Journalism. She worked in a sweatshop and wrote about it. Workers got one bathroom break in ten hours. Nellie almost got fired for asking for water.

The news of Harriet

Quimby's English Channel flight was pushed to the back pages of world newspapers. The Titanic sank that very weekend and overshadowed Harriet's amazing accomplishment.

Anna Eleanor Roosevelt

supported the Social Security Act. It was passed in 1935. It gave aid to the elderly. In 1939, it was amended to give aid to widows and orphans, too.

Malvina Hoffman's Siamese cat, Kiki, traveled with her to Europe many times. Kiki had a mini passport, which officials stamped. Kiki posed for Malvina. When he was sick, he lay still while she gave him injections.

When Martha Graham went to New York, she had her first opportunities to choreograph. She had never heard that word until she came to New York. "At Denishawn," she said, "we just made up dances."

sometimes slept with her corn plants to keep hungry raccoons away.

After the Channel swim, Gertude "Trudy" Ederle was very popular in America and Europe. She was the first woman to receive a ticker-tape parade in New York City. She received so many marriage proposals that a song was written for her — Tell Me, Trudy, Who Is Going To Be The Lucky One?

Grace Hopper lived by the saying, "It's easier to ask forgiveness than it is to get permission."

Barbra Streisand said, "I think nothing is impossible. I think you can be whatever you want to be... I don't accept the word 'no' easily. I've always been fighting it my whole life."
