Tidbits from the Women of the Bay State: Massachusetts

Anne Dudley Bradstreet's first book of poems was called The Tenth Muse Lately Sprung Up in America. It was the only work of Anne's published in her lifetime.

Abigail Adams was the first woman to become both the wife and the mother of a United States President. She did not live to see her son, John Quincy Adams, become the sixth President of the United States in 1825.

Lucretia Coffin Mott became one of the founders of the Philadelphia Female Anti-Slavery Society. Lucretia also helped organize the first Anti-Slavery Convention of American Women.

Dorothea Lynde Dix organized the nurse volunteers for the Union Army. She accepted only plain-looking older spinsters because she didn't want the nurses flirting with the wounded.

Maria Mitchell was the first woman astronomer in the United States.

Lucy Larcom met the poet John Greenleaf Whittier while at the mills. He noticed her poems in the Lowell Offering. In the beginning, he often guided her writing. They remained life-long friends.

Louisa May Alcott was the first woman to register to vote in Concord, Massachusetts in 1879 (41 years before the 19th Amendment gave women the vote across the United States).

Isabella Stewart Gardner loved watching sports. Red Sox baseball and Harvard football were her favorites. She loved horse races, especially when her horse won. Isabella used to say, "Win as though you were used to it, and lose as if you like it."

Katharine Lane Weems made small sculptures of her dog, Yvonne. The sculptures were made into hood ornaments for cars.

Bette Davis believed in being prepared for opportunities. She said, "Even the opportunity to fail is worth something, especially if you get another opportunity to succeed . . ."

Nancy Harkness Love demanded that her pilots always behave properly. One mistake could turn public feelings against the women fliers.

After college, Eunice Kennedy Shriver wanted to help people in need. She became a social worker. She worked with women prisoners in West Virginia. She worked with juvenile delinquents in Chicago.
